Wyoming is a constituent state of the United States of America. It is located in the Mountain West sub-region of the Western United States.

Wyoming earned the nickname Equality State because it was the first state to grant women the constitutional right to vote. This is more than 50 years before the rest of the country. Wyoming is also called the Cowboy State because the bucking bronco is used as a state symbol. The nickname suggests that ranching has historically played a significant role in the state's economy and culture. More than two-thirds of the state's land area is used for livestock grazing, and the state's rangelands are well adapted for the production of animals.

It is situated in Jackson Hole, Wyoming, in the United States. It is the only museum in the country exclusively devoted to wildlife art. The museum contains a sculpture trail that is three-quarters of a mile long. Life-size sculptures of moose and buffalo can be seen there, appearing to race through the mountains.
